

Interview requests are a critical step in networking, research, or journalism. Crafting an effective interview request letter is essential to get a positive response. This article guides you through the process, providing a template, an example, and a variation of the template for different scenarios.

Purpose of an Interview Request Letter

An interview request letter is a formal way of asking someone for a meeting to conduct an interview. Whether it's for a job, a research project, or a journalistic piece, the letter should:

Clearly state the purpose of the interview.

Convey respect and professionalism.

Provide flexibility and convenience for the interviewee.

Key Elements of an Interview Request Letter

Introduction: Briefly introduce yourself and your organization or purpose.

Purpose of the Interview: Clearly explain why you are requesting the interview.

Proposed Date and Time: Suggest a specific time while expressing willingness to adjust to their schedule.

Format of the Interview: Indicate whether it's a phone call, video conference, or in-person meeting.

Duration: Mention how long you expect the interview to take.

Gratitude: Express appreciation for considering your request.

Contact Information: Provide your contact details for any follow-up.
