An Underperforming Student

If a student has struggled academically, it's important to address those issues in a constructive and thoughtful manner that also highlights any improvements or efforts the student has made to overcome those challenges. It's also important to keep in mind that a below-average student may still have strengths and qualities that make them suitable for certain opportunities or programs. It's important to consider those as well when writing a recommendation letter.

Why Write a Letter of Recommendation For a Below Average Student?

There are many reasons why a teacher would choose to write a letter of recommendation for a below average student. The student in question may have:

- Shown significant improvement in their academic performance.
- Exhibited a positive attitude and willingness to learn.
- Taken the initiative to seek out extra help and resources to improve their skills.

- Demonstrated a strong work ethic and dedication to their studies.
- Faced personal challenges that have affected their academic performance but have demonstrated resilience and determination.

Also, a teacher may simply believe that the student will be successful in their future endeavors despite their academic performance. It is important to note that each student is unique, and a teacher should consider the whole person, not just their academic performance when considering to write a letter of recommendation for them.

Sometimes a student who is below average may not deserve a recommendation. They could be far below average academically or simply be difficult to teach. Whatever the reason is, a teacher should decline to write a letter of recommendation in a polite and professional manner.

A teacher should explain that they do not feel they are the best person to provide a positive and effective recommendation for the student, given their academic performance and the teacher's own knowledge of the student's abilities and qualifications.

It's important that the decline is done in a constructive manner, rather than simply turning down without a reason. Providing an explanation for their decline can help the student to understand why and how to improve for the future. The teacher should also express their willingness to assist the student in finding a more suitable reference.

Template for Declining a Recommendation Letter Request

[Student's Name],

Thanks for reaching out and asking me to write a letter of recommendation. Unfortunately, I don't think I'm the best person to write one for you at this time.

[Reasons for Declining. Examples: lack of knowledge about the student's abilities, lack of knowledge about the qualifications for the opportunity, or simply not having enough time to write a worthy letter.]

I'm happy to help you find a teacher or mentor who can write a better letter for you. Just let me know if there's anything I can do to assist in that process. I want to be honest with you, but also want to make sure we can find someone who can give you the best recommendation possible.

Best,
